Introduction to World Politics

Tuna Wars: Debriefing
Ole J. Forsberg, Ph.D.
Creighton University

The Assignment

The Tuna Wars Debriefing (50 points) represents a chance for you to share the lessons you learned from the Tuna Wars activity. In a well-organized essay, and pulling in class material from the semester, what lessons did the Tuna Wars simulation teach?

This short paper (~ 4 pages) is due on April 25, 2008. It will be graded on how well you pull in class material and explain it using the examples of the Tuna Wars activity. Do not forget to properly cite and reference your sources. I would hate to fail anyone on this assignment.

Outline of Paper

I. Introduction
   Brief overview of Tuna Wars simulation
   Purpose of the simulation

II. Realism
   Definition of Realism
   a. Example One of Realism during Tuna Wars
   b. Example Two of Realism during Tuna Wars

III. Liberalism
   Definition of Liberalism
   a. Example One of Liberalism during Tuna Wars
   b. Example Two of Liberalism during Tuna Wars

IV. Constructivism
   Definition of Constructivism
   a. Example One of Constructivism during Tuna Wars
   b. Example Two of Constructivism during Tuna Wars

V. Other Observations (what you learned, as tied to these sub-topics; pick two)
   a. International Law and Organizations
   b. Democracy
   c. Anarchy
   d. Strategy
   e. Others?

VI. Conclusion
   Summarize this paper
   What one lesson did you learn?

VII. Reference List

Final Notes:

The Roman-Numeral sections are your headings (or first-headings). The Latin-Letter sections are your sub-headings (or second-headings). The only exception is the Introduction, where you do not provide a heading.

Remember: The first-headings are base font, bolded. The second-headings are base font, italics. Both are on separate lines.

You do not have to title the sections as I have above, but you do need to title them something relevant to the section.

Class discussions are not referencable. If someone offered a verbal view during class, there is no need to cite it.