

Introduction to Political Science

Tuna Wars Analysis
Ole J. Forsberg, Ph.D.
University of Tennessee

Overview

The Tuna Wars Analysis (20 points) represents a chance for you to share the lessons you learned from the Tuna Wars activity. In a well-organized essay, and pulling in class material from the last half of the semester, what lessons did the Tuna Wars simulation teach?

This short paper (3 – 4 pages) will be due on the last day of classes (April 27, 2007). It will be graded on how well you are able to pull in class material and explain it using the examples of the Tuna Wars activity.

Outline of Paper

- I. Introduction
 - Brief overview of Tuna Wars simulation
 - Purpose of the simulation
- II. Realism
 - Definition of Realism
 - a. Example One of Realism during Tuna Wars
 - b. Example Two of Realism during Tuna Wars
- III. Liberalism
 - Definition of Liberalism
 - a. Example One of Liberalism during Tuna Wars
 - b. Example Two of Liberalism during Tuna Wars
- IV. Other Observations (what you learned, as tied to these sub-topics; pick two)
 - a. Communist Manifesto
 - b. Political Ideology
 - c. International Law and Organizations
 - d. Others?
- V. Conclusion
 - Summarize this paper
 - What one lesson did you learn?
- VI. Reference List

Final Note:

The Roman-Numeral sections are your headings (or first-headings). The Latin-Letter sections are your sub-headings (or second-headings). The only exception is the Introduction, where you do not provide a heading. The first-headings are base font, bolded. The second-headings are base font, italics. Both are on separate lines. You do not have to title the sections as I have above, but you do need to title them something relevant to the section.